- 01 | This Greenway traditional home gets a modern face lift with frameless white oak cabinets, limestone mantel, linen wrapped panel for flat screen, and a 12 foot solid glass window that opens the room to natural light.
- 02 | Surround ceiling to floor sheers add a chic style to this small dining room as the window addition opens the space to complementary texture and color.

Niki Powell Samuel asserts that proper design begins with focus on the space. Each project is balanced and created from clean-line architectural features that tie in natural materials using light, color, and texture. Finish-out, while significant, is far less important to Samuel than the space itself. She never skips the process of making necessary architectural corrections. Once the space is prepared, she integrates finds from around the world and often creates custom features and furnishings from her Custom Couture Furnishing line. A previous gallery owner, Samuel brings an appreciation for art and its influence to the overall design concept. She believes a project's color range should remain subtle, serving as the perfect backdrop for significant art.
